LIBERATED JERUSALEM ✓

Burton Holmes' "Liberated Jerusalem" is quite a different Jerusalem from that shown by him in several of his other visits to this historic old city; this time it is the Jerusalem liberated by Allenby and his modern Crusaders. Mr. Holmes takes you along the line of the new military railway from Egypt,—the line laid down by the British a few years ago. You change cars at Ludd where you become aware that the British Tommies are on the job. You become even more aware of this fact when you reach the Holy Gates; you go to the Jaffa Gate and there see the breach made in the city wall to give the ex-Kaiser an absolutely new way of entering the city. You go to visit the Kaiserin Augusta Victoria Endowment,—a fine building erected at the expense of the late wife of the ex-Kaiser, as a hospice or resting place for German Pilgrims and as a place of convalescence; it is now used as a hospital; a statue of the ex-Kaiserin is in the cloister and a fresco of the ex-Kaiser adorns the ceiling of the chapel. You also visit Mount Scopus, on whose slopes now rest the British Tommies who died in the Allenby campaign; on the exact spot where the cemetery now stands was the Camp of the Emperor Titus, whose legions were encamped there in the year 70 A. D.

For HOUSE ORGAN:

"Liberated Jerusalem," the Jerusalem of Allenby's Crusaders, will be Burton Holmes' objective point on..... He will take you by rail from Egypt,—through the Jaffa Gate,—to many interesting places not seen in his former Jerusalem journeyings.
